

Regarding the common longer-term result indicator on improved labour market situation, is it considered as an improved labour market situation if a participant with part-time employment decides to launch his/her own business?

A change from employed to self-employed does not necessarily imply an improvement in the labour market situation of the individual concerned according to the definition of the indicator. For each case, all criteria set out in the definition should be checked irrespective of whether the participant is employed or self-employed.
